Trees are over man's head.
We select trees.
We place trees.
And trees do the rest.
They tell us about ourselves . . .
What we want to be . . .
What we will be . . .

Walking into the basement of Bliss Hall, one first hears a startling series of "Hellos" performed with a slightly southern drawl.

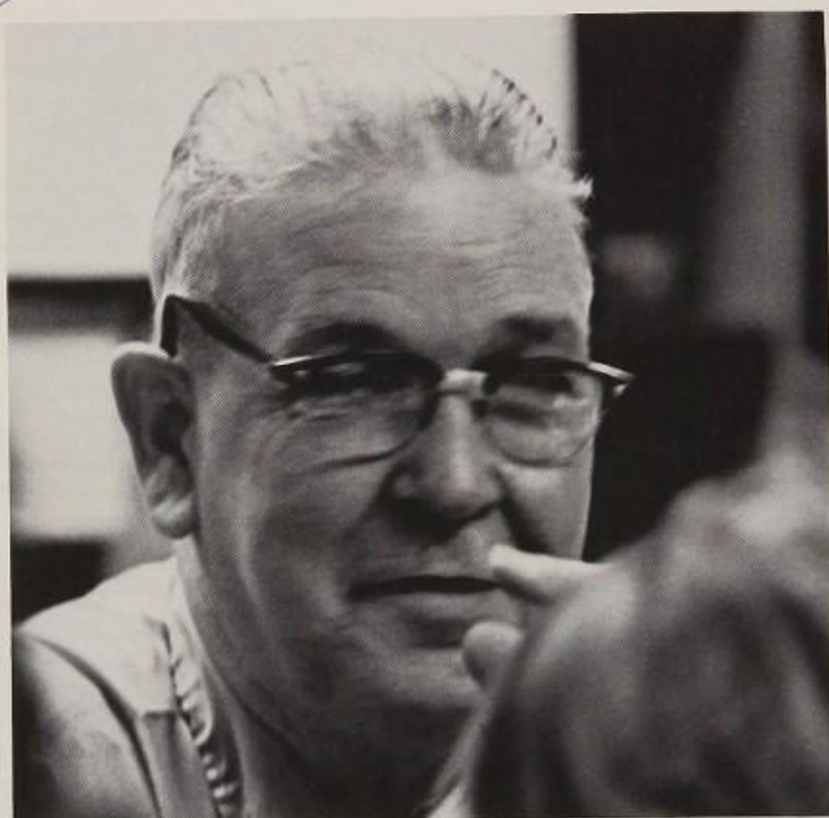

Walking closer, one hears the following monologue, "39 and 2, 41, 89 and 4, dalla' 44, ... 59 3....."

Man is an outrageous creature, animal and intellectual. He wants to have his cake, eat it, and then know what it means. As you roam this book, watch these people eat and watch them try to know and recognize the pains and joys of their effort.

Kathy,
 stay as sweet
 as you are and
 maybe I'll get to

Dear White Wagons, the Jolly Jeepster, plus another...

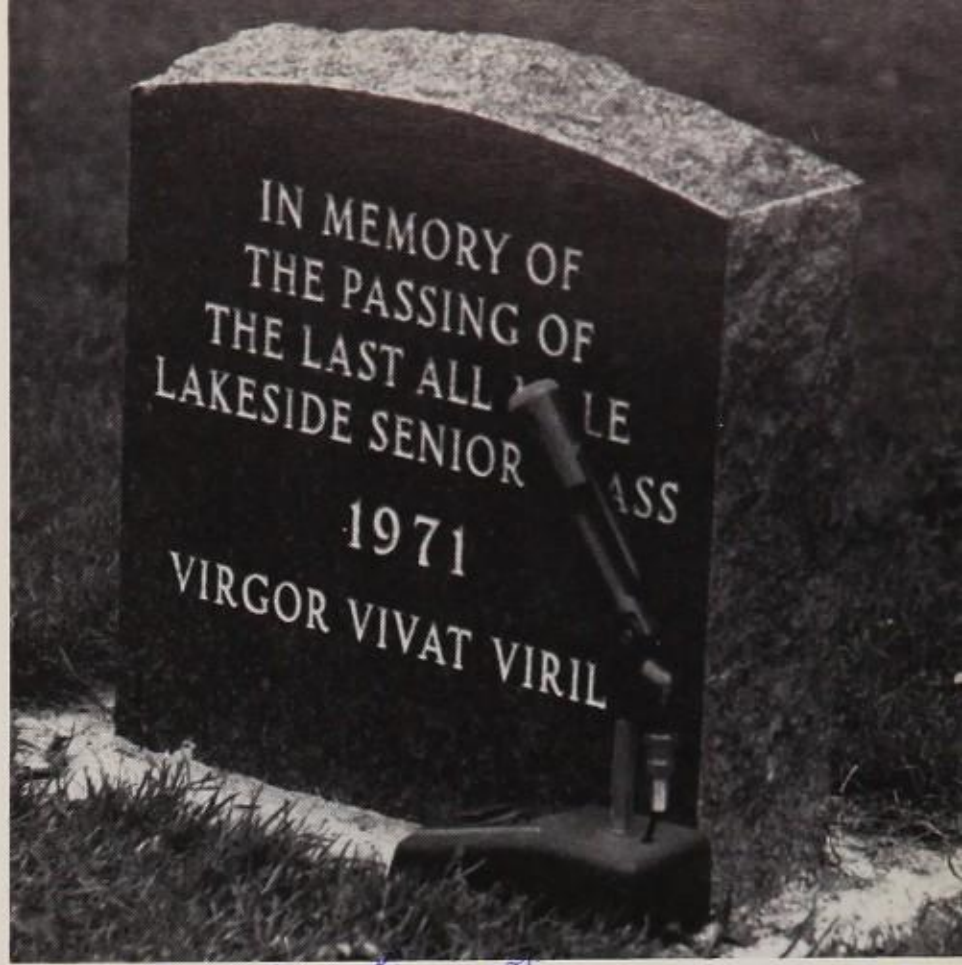

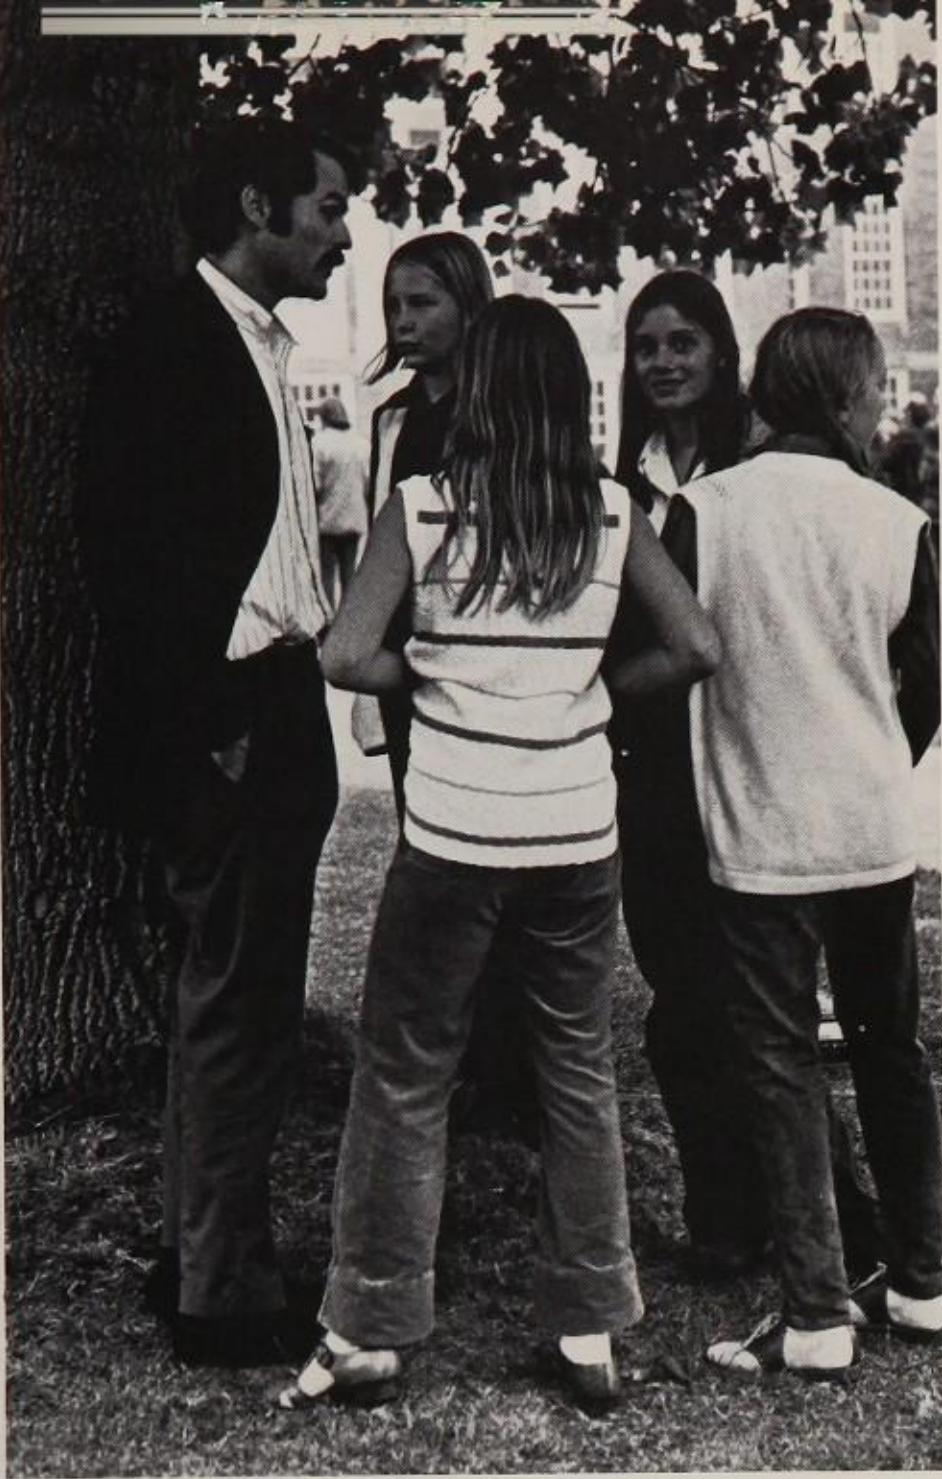

Your reply greatly impressed me, it really hit me hard. But to say that immaturity is the spice of life is wrong; because the spice of life runs parallel to the fact that no education is complete without an insoluble problem. So if you clowns play for more than you can afford to lose, you may eventually learn the game, because time is on my side, and the weed conquers all.

I know how you guys feel, because I've been there myself, but I came back. It is all worth it. A crook is paid by the loot at his feet, as a long distance runner is paid by the snap of a white thread across his chest.....

You know, in after writing in
so many books you
just ran out of things to say. This may not be very good but I remember the time we went down to the reunion and talked when you just didn't want to go to class. You've changed this year since last year and you'll be keep on going in no time. Keep striving forward.

I have got a tip that I would like to relate . . .

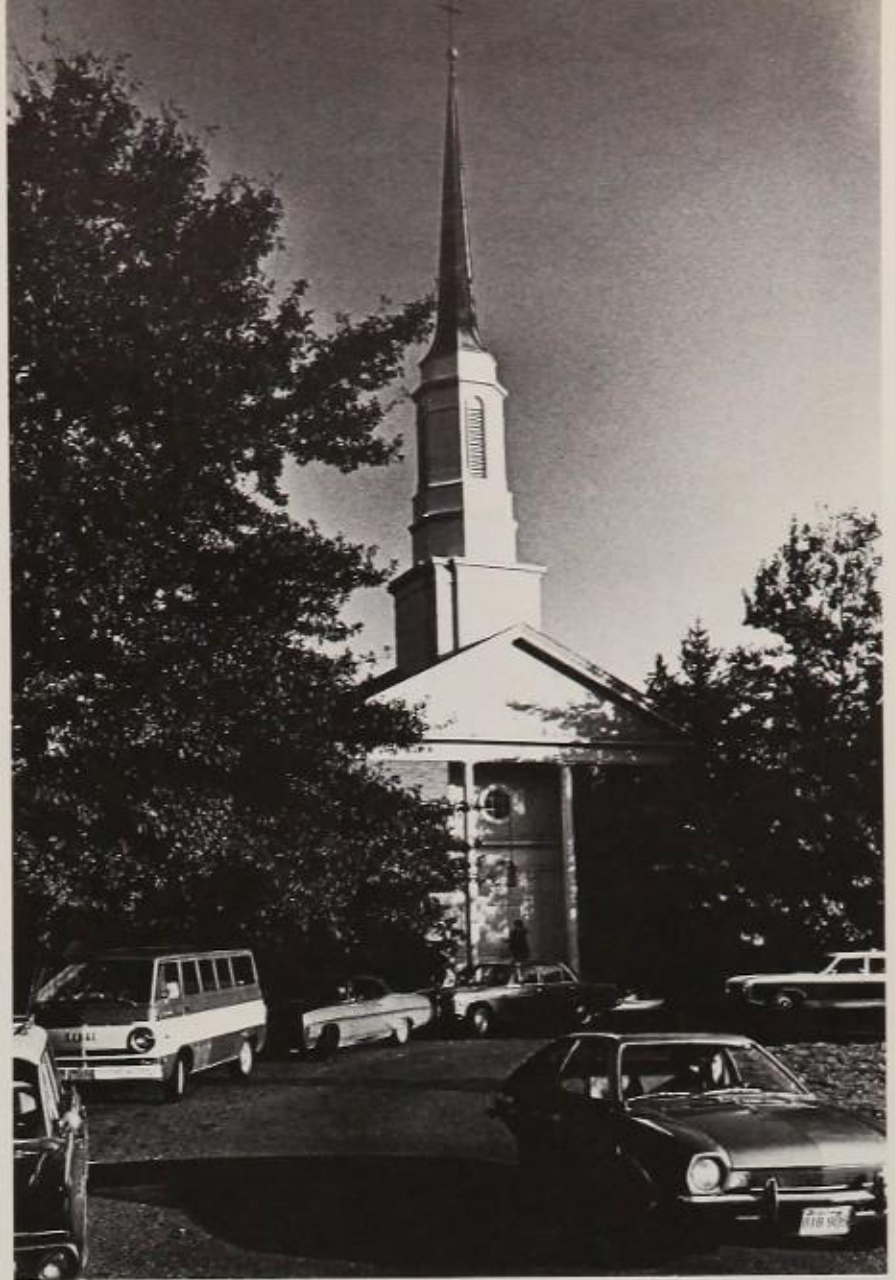

By springtime
I've forgotten more
cold heart than you'll ever know.
The char has turned
to flames.

A tree is a statement, a fact of life. Look at a tall one, a solid one, an old one. There it is, alive, new, yet forever growing and changing. When old age and death do come, a part of the world is changed for having known that tree.

Kathy,
 Well now we have great memories of Lakeside as well as St. Nick.
 It was a great year, even in Mr. Tylers english class! Have a terrific summer and don't get into too much trouble (HoHo), CHEERS,
 Eleanor

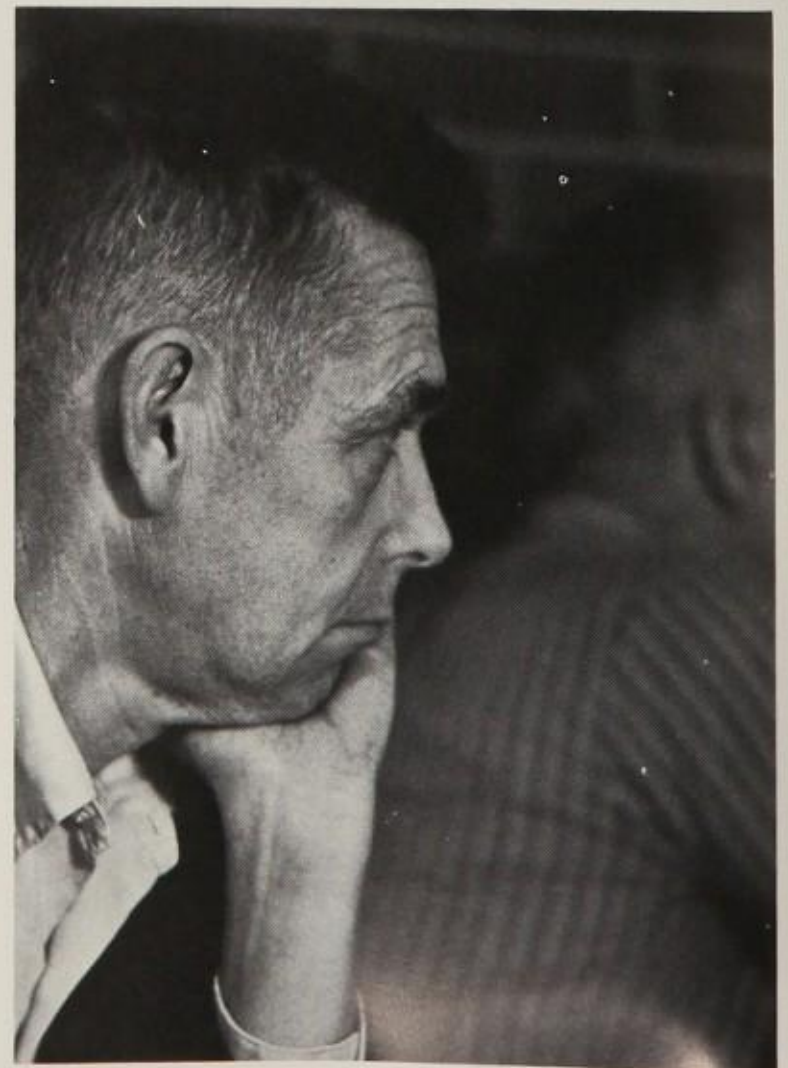

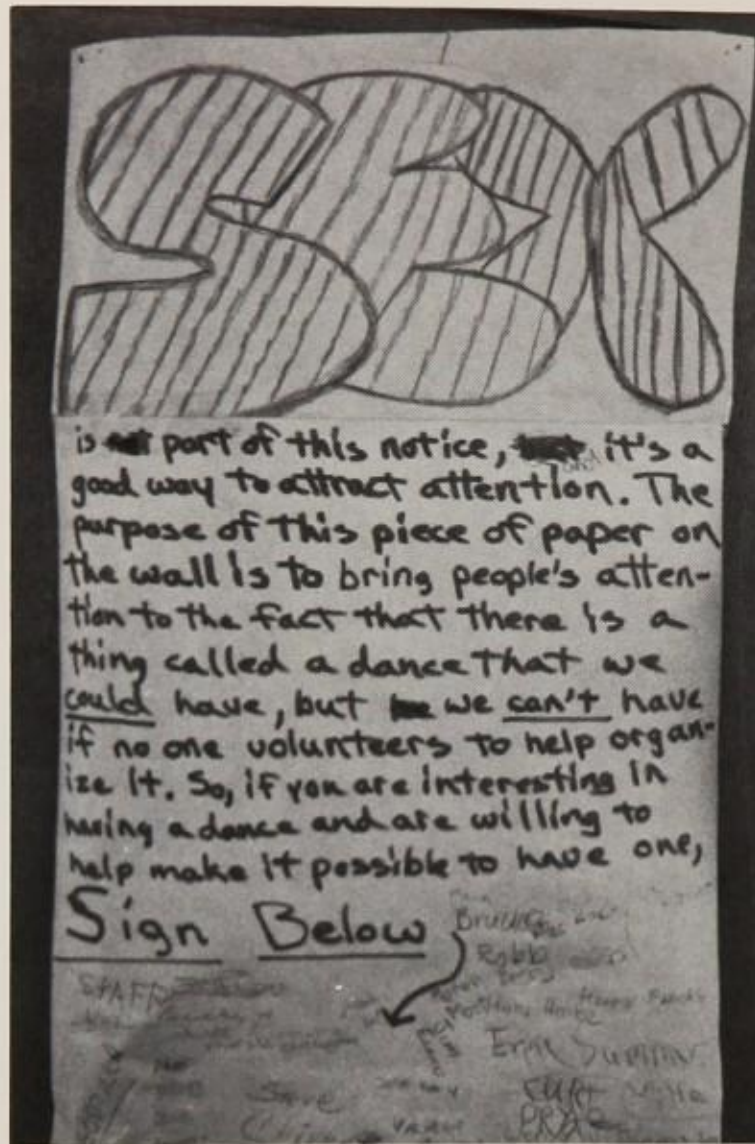

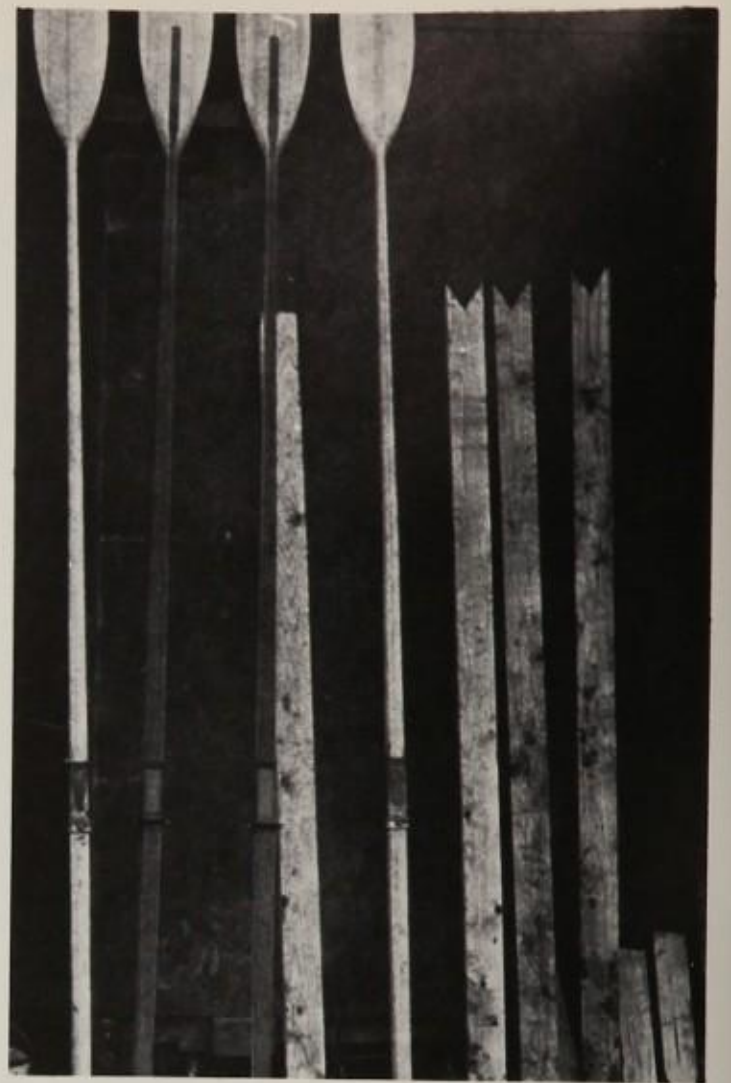

Well Kathy,
It's been a fun year really don't know what to say so I'll say Be Good and see ya this summer!
Katie

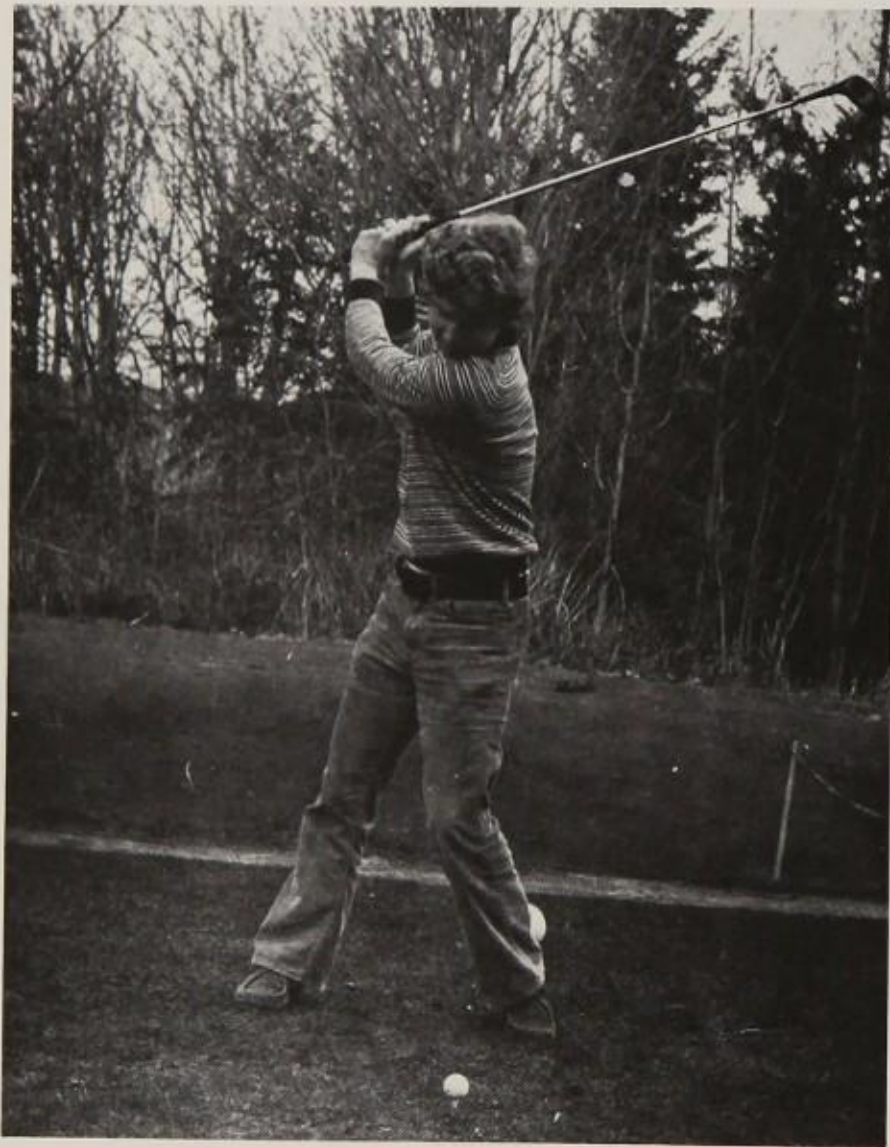

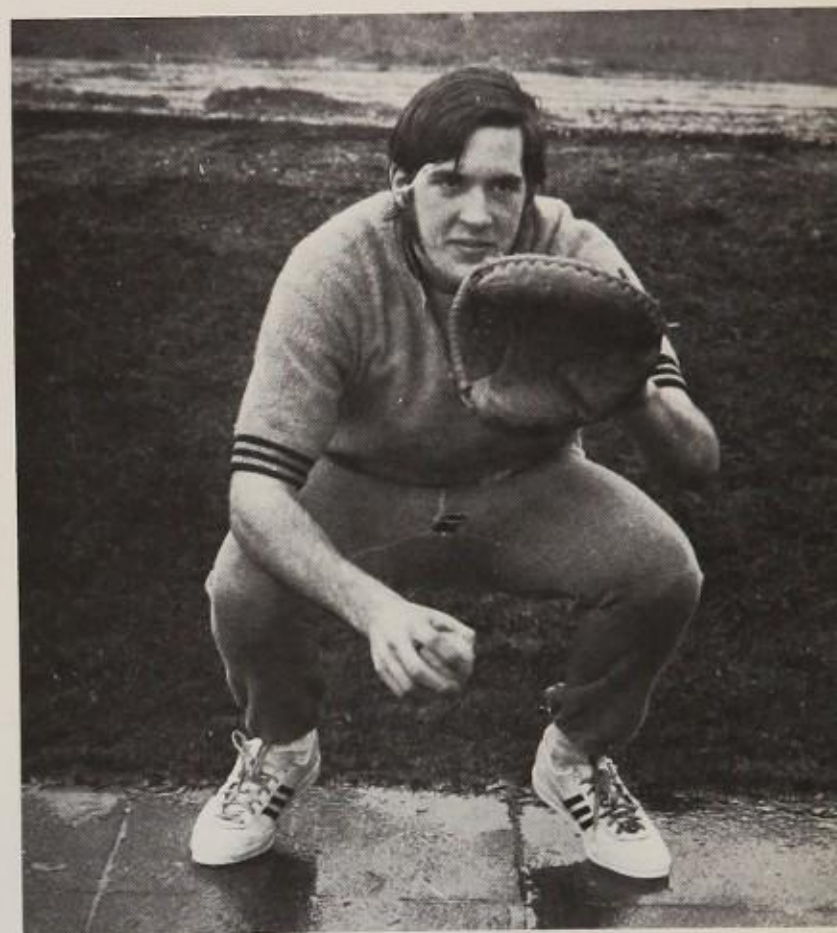

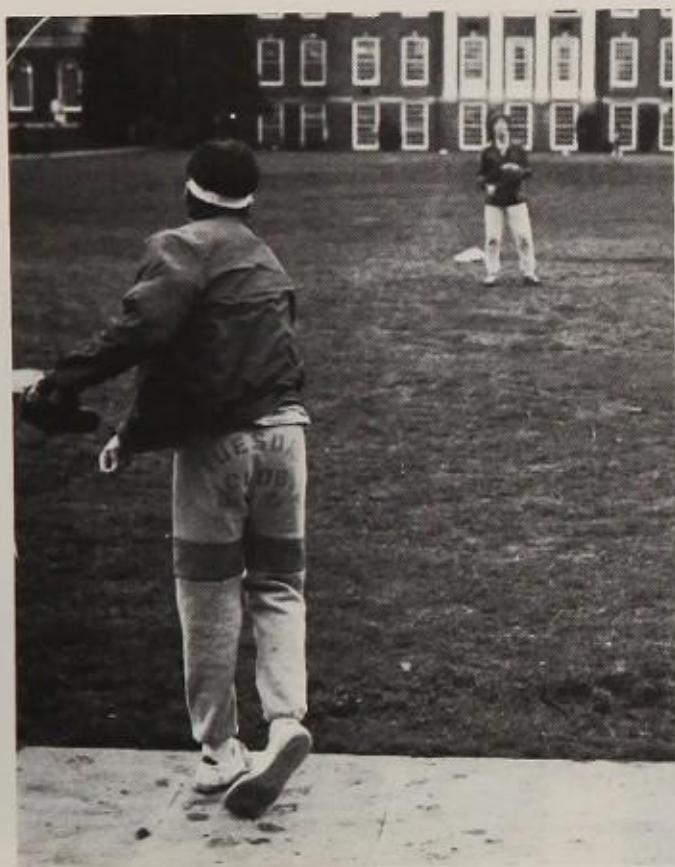

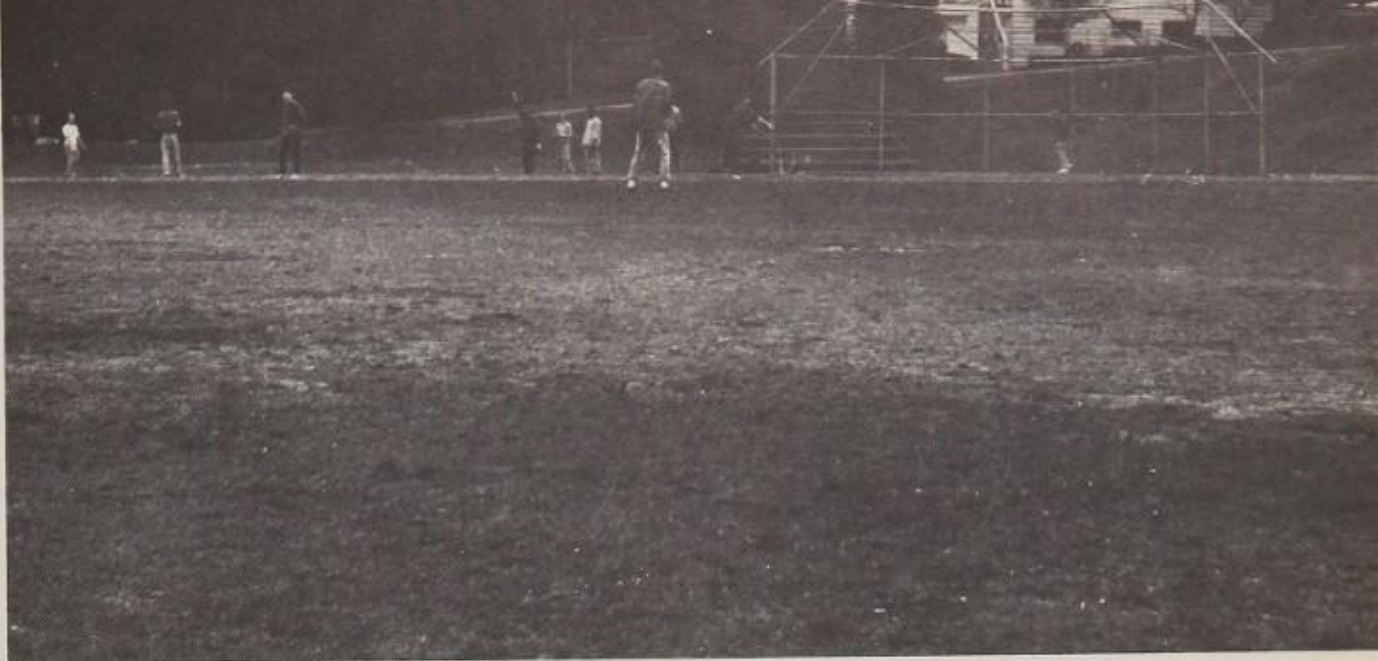

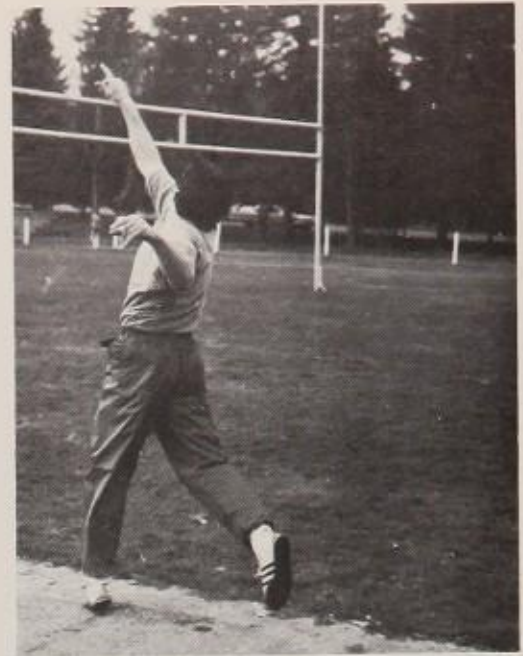

To Kathy,
Have a fantastic summer! I'll probably see you again this summer, no doubt. Don't forget the guardrail.

Frank

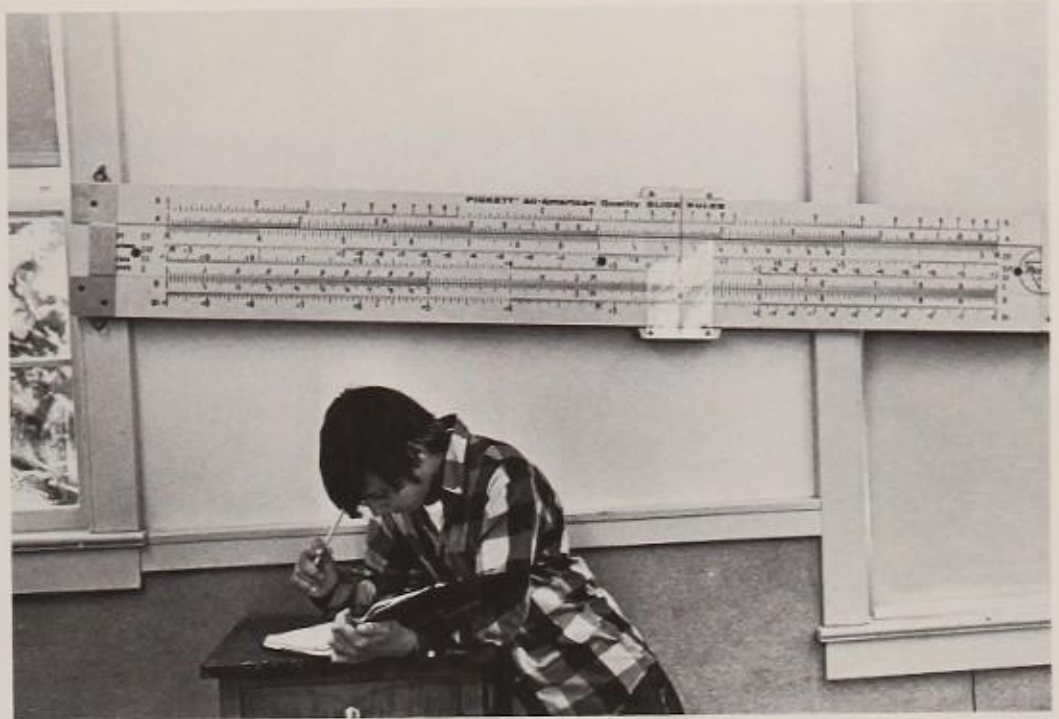

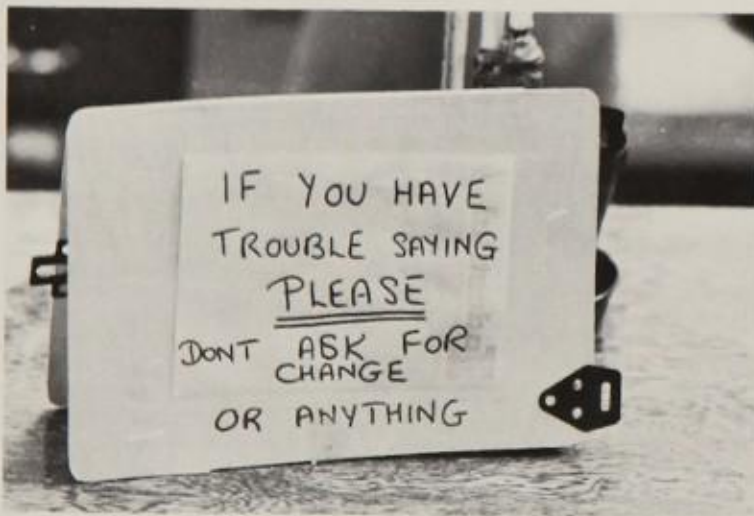

To Cathy
Luck!
Laura

Mac wears a cigar. He's never too busy to offer a story of his reckless youth or to launch into the saga of his ever present backache.

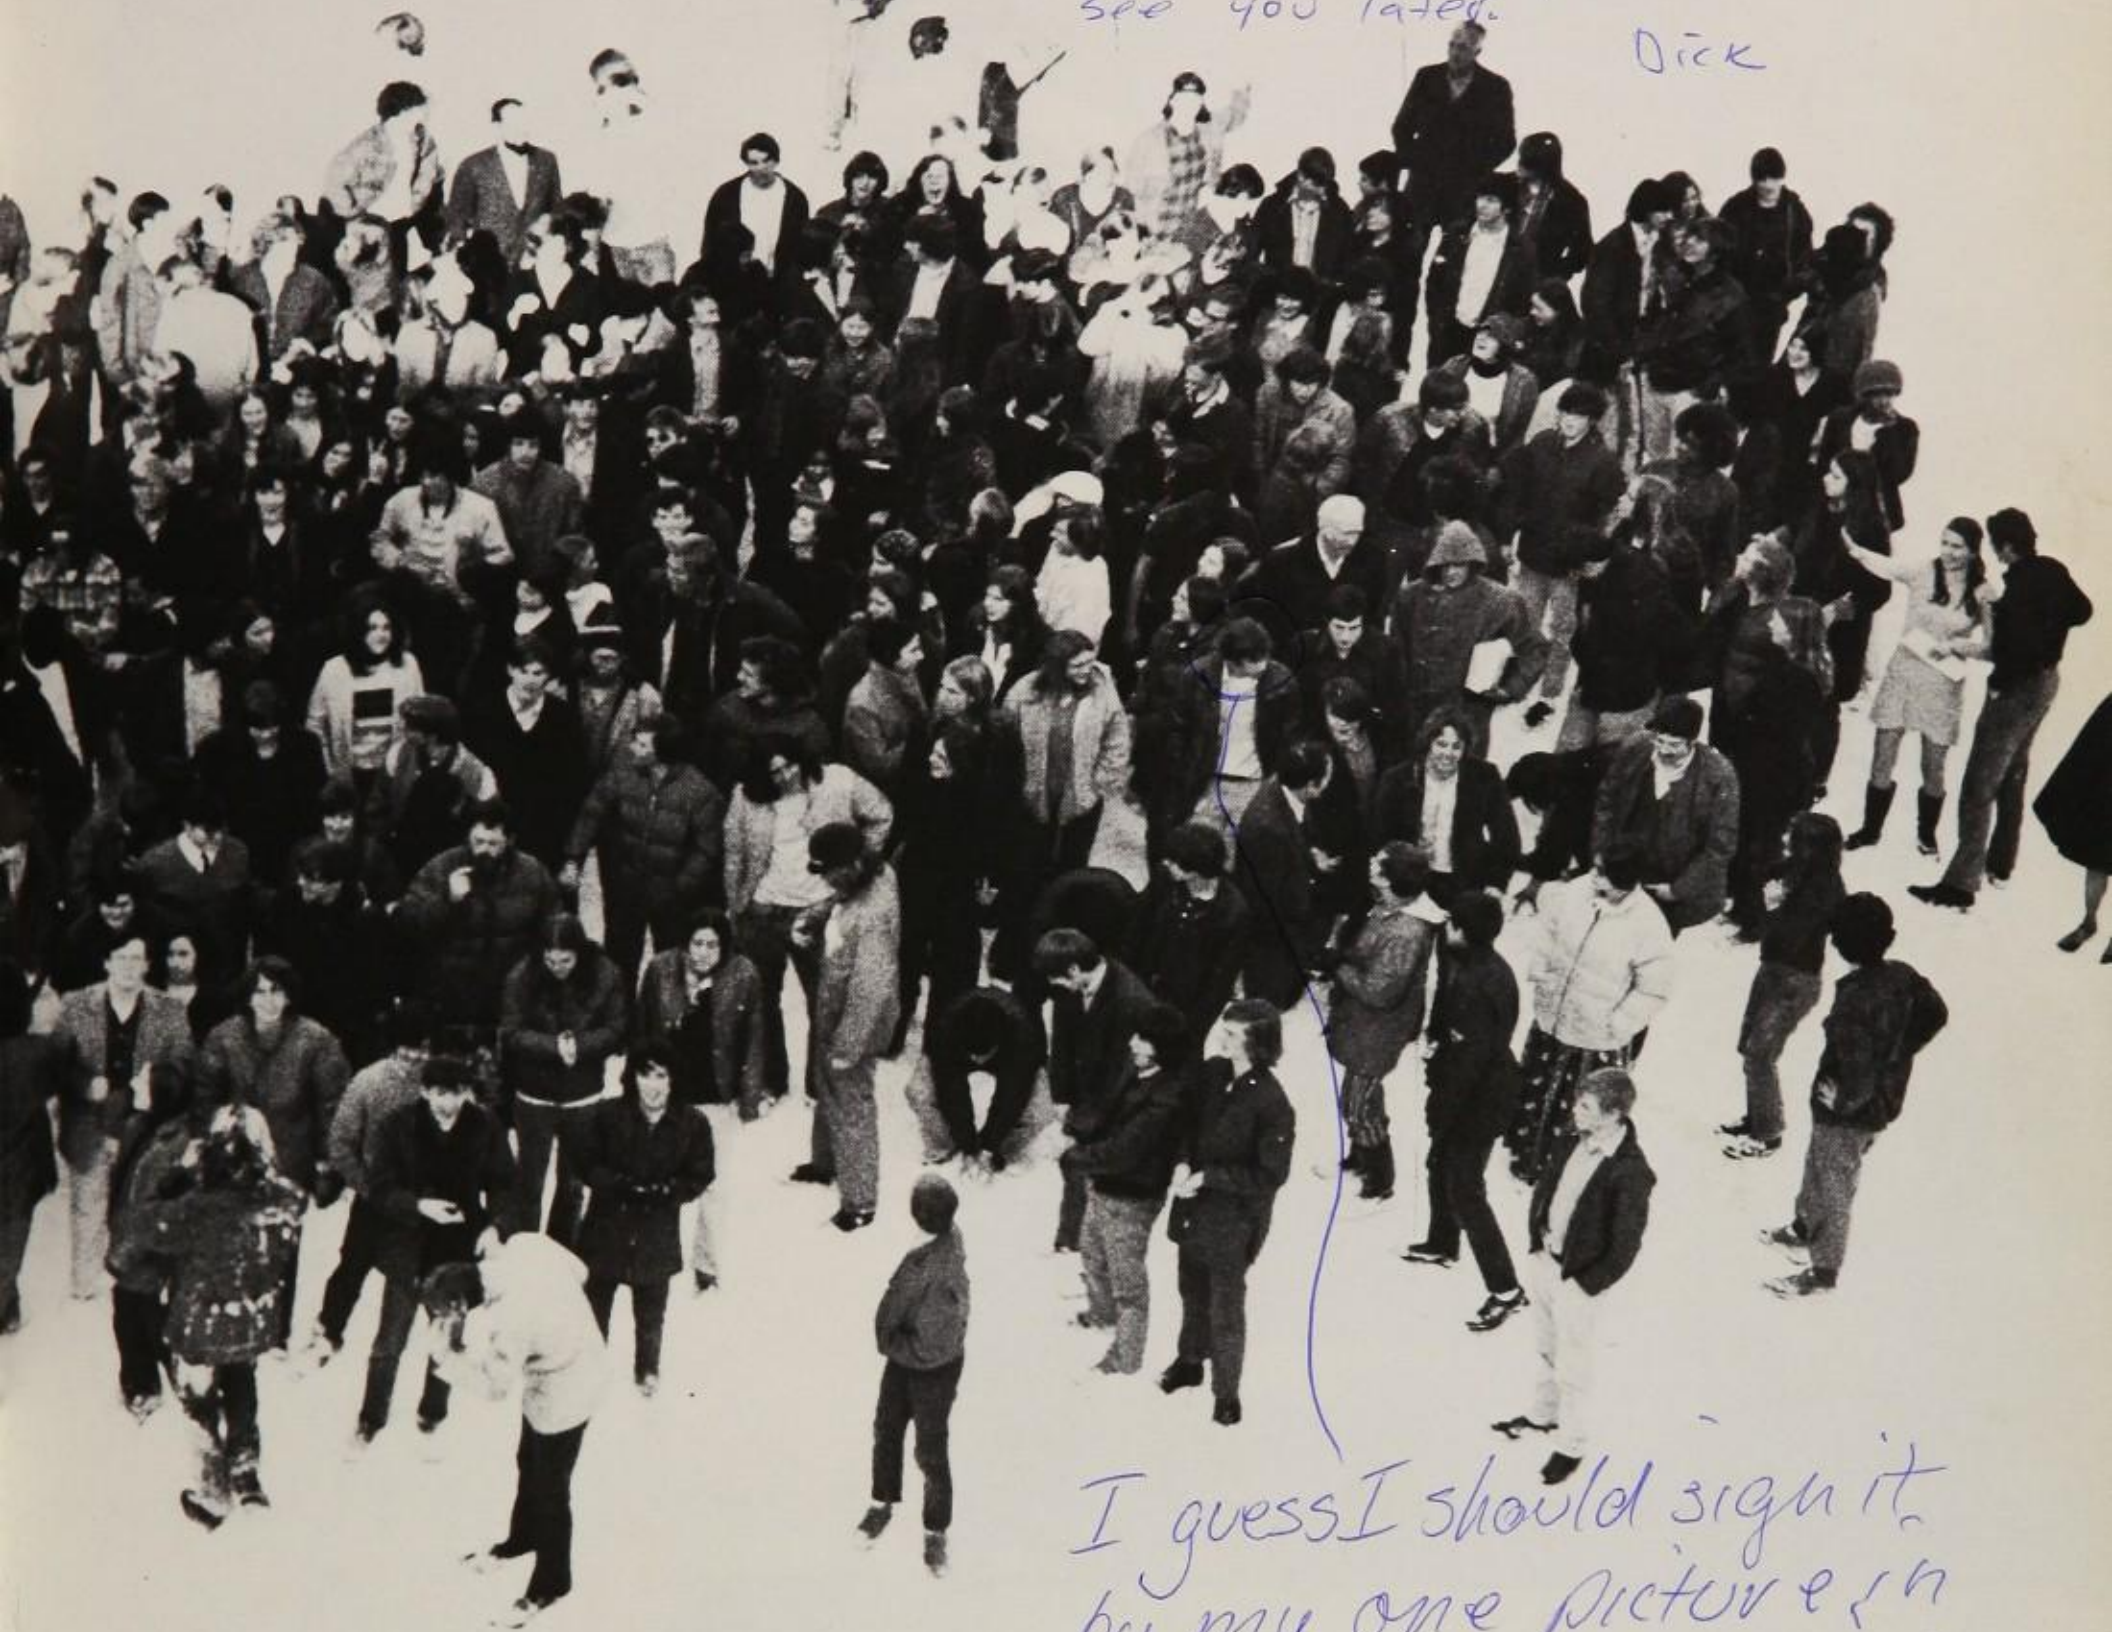

Cathy,

I'm in here somewhere but I don't know for sure. If you find me, give me a call.
Have a good summer but stay out of trouble see you later.

Dick

I guess I should sign it by my one picture in the book Kris Kristofferson

Allow us to clear up society's
confusion over male
and female roles.
They can clearly
be traced to the
family relationship.
Fathers hate it when
their daughters don't like them. Girls
think fathers are corny. Fathers don't like it when their
boys hate girls.
Boys think corny.
Mothers love corny
girls. Boys think
fathers who love girls
are corny mothers.

In making a book, if not reading one, certainly one of the most interesting areas is the last page. I like to think of the feeling of the book as a moving body with appendages, dancing from page to page. Naturally there are certain still points where the body stops and its appendages work around it. Then it moves on. The final still point is the last page. The body stops for the last time. The goal, then, for this page, is to find some means of giving perpetual motion to the appendages, to keep the body dancing, to keep the feeling alive. But how? A poem, perhaps? A bit of mysterious, whimsical copy? An interesting, tempting problem . . .
